

Mike Forde, ULSU Academic Officer 2014-2015

Being a Sabbat is one of the most challenging and rewarding things you'll likely experience. Many from the out-look assume it's running around throwing out condoms, placing up a few posters while getting to enjoy a few free gigs. While there's a lot of fun aspects, there's a lot of responsibility. If elected you represent over 13,000 people and help countless students throughout the year. Not only do you act as a voice, sitting in various committees and meetings, you also act as an ear, listening to problems and doing your best to help those who struggle. Your time as a sabbat not only gives opportunity to develop skills that stick with you for life but also allows for self-learning and development that you could never imagine. If you want to make a difference, if you want to help people and if your up for a challenge, running for the Students Union will give you that opportunity.
